President Lincoln replies to Gov. Seymour's second letter in a brief but decisive note printed in another column. He reiterates his determination to proceed with the draft, giving ample assurance that no wrong shall be done in consequence of alleged disparity of quotas. This settles the matter, whether Gov. Seymour is satisfied or net.

GOV. SEYMOUR AND THE DRAFT. Gov. Seymour writes to President Lincoln asking a postponement of the National Draft until its constitutionality can be legally adjudicated and until certain alleged inequalities in its requirement of men from different sections of our State be removed. The President responds that, while he does not object to an adjudication of the constitutionality of the National Conscription, but will facilitate the obtaining of it, he cannot postpone the Draft because time is essential and the need of recruiting our armies in the field is argent as well as imperative. But as it is complained that certain districts are required to furnish an undue number, he will reduce the number to be immediately drawn from those (City) Districts to the average of that required from the other (rural) Districts, and proceed to have these Districts respectively.

THE ALLIANCE OF THE WESTERN POWERS AGAINST RUSSIA.

No official documents have been published in the Polish question since Prince Gorchakoff issued his famous replies to the notes of the three Western Powers. Public opinion, in its speculations upon the important question of war or peace, had therefore to feed entirely upon rumors. And yet, resting on no new fact, it has undergone during the short time which has passed three sudden and great changes. At first, it was announced from the RESCUE OF THE CONSTITUTION FROM THE HANDS OF ITS upon rumors. And yet, resting on no new official violators requires a vigorous and determined fact, it has undergone during the short time which has passed three sudden and great changes. At first, it was announced from Paris that the reply of Russia was very conciliatory, and that Russia adhered to the substance of the six points. This was soon found to be a mistake, and the Paris papers generally raised the war crypapers generally raised the war crypapers, it was intimated, only wanted the assurance of the aid of England and Austria in order to go at once to war. England shared the general indignation against Russia, and was very loud in denouncing her despotic policy, but as to going to war, to the utter amazement of the French, the British of Government and the British statesmen seemed to be unanimously opposed to it. Some of the State, though not necessarily till the last.

As soon as substitutes are accepted they are placed under guard and marched off to a camp established near the Circle, where they are uniformed and sent to regiments in the field. All substitutes offered are swort regiments in the field. All substitutes offered are swort as to whether they are deserters from any existing military organization, or from the draft elsewhere. If they are such deserters, and are subsequently discovered so to be, the parties offering them are again liable to draft; but it they desert subsequently to their acceptance as substitutes, the person offering them is not responsible or liable to a further draft.

FILLING UP THE REGIMENTS.

The Washington Star of Wednesday says:
Perhaps a thousand conscripts a day are already joining the Army of the Potomac. In a week to number reaching it daily will be greater, we apprehend. They go forward in excellent spirits, and bid fair to make admirable soldiers in a very brief time.
